PROGRAM NOTE

Written in 1889, Mahler looked upon his First Symphony as: "an adventure of the soul." Mahler used the orchestral resources for alternating moods of happiness, sadness, tranquility and excitement. The second movement is scherzo-like, energetic and vigorous. It is designated by Mahler as an "Austrian Peasant Dance."

NOTE TO CONDUCTOR

A 3rd Violin (Viola treble clef) part is provided although not included on the score. It is a composite part, supporting the Viola whenever possible and reverting to the 2nd Violin as necessary. A Bass Clarinet part also is provided but not included on the score.

GUSTAV MAHLER

1860-1911

Gustave Mahler was born in Kalischt, Bohemia, and showing an early interest in music, began piano studies at age six. He already was a remarkable pianist when he entered the Vienna Conservatory in 1875, at 15 years of age.

It was during his years at the conservatory that Mahler's natural gift for composition and conducting became evident, and he was urged by his professors to place more emphasis on composition and conducting, less on piano studies.

This event was a major turning-point in Mahler's musical life.

However, when his initial attempts at composition were rebuffed, he turned his energies to conducting, becoming well-known as a "Operatic Conductor". Yet, his first love still was composition.

He wrote a total of nine symphonies (the tenth symphony not completed) and many songs and song-cycles before his death in Vienna. Mahler never heard his last two completed works: "Das Lied von der Erde" and Symphony No.9.
